Dear Friends and Colleagues,

We understand that the recent images of unrest in Paris may have raised concerns among some of you who are planning to attend our upcoming congress.

First and foremost, we would like to reassure you and share some information directly from Paris.

The incidents reported in the media are serious, and we certainly do not wish to minimize them. However, these events do not reflect everyday life throughout the city.

One of us lives and works in central Paris, in an area near the recent disturbances. Despite these events, there has been no disruption to daily life in the area, and her osteopathic practice has been operating normally, without any patient cancellations.

The congress will take place at the Maison de la Chimie, in the 7th arrondissement, a quiet district that is home to several major French institutions, including the National Assembly and government ministries, which is a secure and well-guarded area at all times.

We have been in direct contact with the management of the Maison de la Chimie, who have confirmed that the immediate surroundings of the venue have not experienced any disruption. The same applies to the congress hotel.

We fully understand that travelling internationally requires confidence and peace of mind, and we take your concerns very seriously.

We will continue to follow developments closely, remain in contact with our local partners, and share any relevant updates as the congress approaches.

Above all, we want you to know that we are looking forward to welcoming you to Paris and sharing what promises to be a remarkable scientific and international gathering.

Please do not hesitate to contact us if you have any questions or concerns.

Warm regards,

Philippe Sterlingot
